“ March 22, 2011

We will always remember Bedford—for his loyalty and generosity to his friends and neighbors, for his service to his country and his community, and for his great good humor.

We remember how warmly he and Hildegard welcomed us when we moved next door to their home on First Avenue in Betterton, and how Bedford was always ready to offer help or advice or information about the community and its resident wildlife--as when he explained in response to our inquires that the racket we heard late one spring night was the call of “an unattached mockingbird.”

Bedford’s strength of character and good humor in the face of disappointment and loss were an inspiration, and his spirit will endure in the hearts of all who knew him.

“ I am so very sad that my dear, dear friend and first boss at Washington College has passed. I went to visit him during the Christmas holidays and he was sleeping peacefully and I didn't wake him. Mr. Groves was a very special person in my life. I learned more from him during the time I spent as his secretary than I learned for two years at secretarial school. The very first lesson I learned was NOT to mail the letter your boss dictated until he signed it! He was so very very kind and patient. He also had a wonderful sense of humor and often laughed at and with that very young and inexperienced woman who was trying so hard! Some of the best lessons I learned were learned at his desk. He used to tell everyone how impressed he was with my dictation skills. He didn't realize that he was the best boss I ever had to take dictation from - he spelled all of the hard words for me. I will miss my kind and patient friend. Mrs. Groves, your loving devoted care has been an inspiration. It is a beautiful love story!
With love and sorrow -
