“ I'll remember Mr. Tom with admiration and respect. He was a talented man who was fearless when tackling a daunting task. How many can say that they built their own home? He did! He had a great laugh, loved crabbing and fishing and always seemed at home on the water.

Once we were at a bull roast down on the shore that consisted of mostly Eastern Shore residents, except for a few of us. The locals took to calling us "chicken neckers", a term used disparagingly to describe people from the Western Shore. Real crabbers I was told, use eel as bait with trot lines. Not chicken necks which are more expensive. I didn't mind the term. After all, in my limited experience, crabs prefer chicken to eel so doesn't that make it better bait and therefore the smarter choice? But I digress...

I'd like to think that Mr. Tom is now seated at a table on the other side, picking crabs atop a newspaper covered table with a cold beer to his right, all the while looking over his eyeglasses as if to say, "care to join me?" And if I'm right, I hope they are 10 inches point-to-point, packed and seasoned perfectly. Rest well Mr. Tom. I'm glad that our paths in life crossed.
