“ Hi, I'm Rose Waddell, Catherine's daughter. I have many memories of her but one stands out more than all the rest right now. My husband Wayne and I had watched a documentary about the Great Depression. I was saddened by the hardships of the people struggling to survive this era. Afterwards, I called my mother to ask her if she remembered anything about the Great Depression. She said, Oh yes, I remember the soup kitchens, and all the poor people living in shacks down by the Potomac River. They'd lost everything. Then she told me that her Grandmother used to make a lot of sandwiches, then she would take my mother with her to hand the sandwiches out to the people living in the shacks. My mother was a small child at the time. I'll never forget that. Now, whenever I see anything about the Great Depression, I see her there, a little child handing out sandwiches to the needy. You can't see her in the photos or documentaries, but I see her there anyway in my heart and my mind. My mother, a part of history.
