I was 6 years old the day Jill was born and have loved her ever since. Jacque was my age and we still were playing with dolls, but I would have rather played with Jill. When Jill was about 5, Isabel offered me a dollar to teach Jill to ride a two wheel bike. I ran that child around and around that house until she could do it on her own. I took that dollar, but little did Isabel know, I would have done it for free. Jill was that cute little curly headed bright light of the neighborhood. I got married and Jill went off to school and then to work and we only saw each other infrequently, but in our later lives we saw quite a bit of each other. She was always a party waiting to happen. We had different goals, politics and lifestyles, but it didn't matter. I will soooo miss her visits. She came through the door with a bottle of something , some flowers or a bucket of chicken and we reminisced about our wonderful parents and our great childhood. When both of our mothers were gone we got in the routine of making Christmas cookies together and she was the oven watcher. We're going to burn a lot of cookies without her, but we'll think of her every time. She was a bright light in our lives and it will never be the same. Our lives were better for having her in it.
