“ I remember walking into his office to tell him I smashed the side of his brand new car with a work truck and he let me live for some reason. I remember spraining my ankle at work after everyone left for the day and he had to drive back to the store and take me to the doctors. I remember driving a work truck back to the warehouse and forgot to close the back door in which all the supplies got soaked. Jay pulled me to the side to lecture me “you may be Drew’s boy but you ain’t mine” he said .. little did he know I really respected him for that . Jay had a kind heart and didn’t have to have kids to be a great father and mentor. My heart goes out to his family he will greatly be missed but also greatly remembered

“ I will always remember Jay as a man of strength and grace, fortitude and wisdom, both street smart and book smart who approached life with wit and humor and I count myself fortunate to have shared some time in this world with him. My most sincere thoughts are with those who are now missing his presence in their lives, his brothers, all his family and especially his beautiful and loving wife Sharon. -Mike Koelbl and Kim Myers
