“ I only met Mariana once, but I'd already developed a mental image of her from working with her daughter, Debbie. Over the months of her struggle with debilitating illness, I came to see her as a woman of fortitude and courage; a woman of substance; a woman greatly loved.

It was my privilege to actually meet her just 6 days before she passed on to immortality. Although she was declining, and must have been in great pain, she was lovely and kind and treated me as if I was someone very special - clearly, any friend of her daughter's was her friend too. As I left that day, my impression was of a woman who was dying with the same grace and beauty with which she lived.

My heartfelt sympathy to her family.
