“ Mary was my first wife and a very good one. We made a warm, vibrant family of six, and our children are fabulous people---one in memory only.

“ Peter and I arrived, quite literally, on Mary’s doorstep in our teenaged years. The children of her new husband, strangers at first but connected in this way, she accepted and welcomed us.

Mary showed me what it is to be hospitable. There was always a good new book on the bedside table and a photo of me on the bureau when we visited. A plan to a local museum or something she thought may interest me. She told me that the key to hospitality is making someone feel comfortable and she did that - always.

Mary’s love of art, food, design and style were just some of the things I admired in these formidable years and things she so generously shared with me. Red Grooms. How to tell when a steak is cooked. Where and how to apply foundation. She gave me my first graph paper and explained the value of floor plans, which I would use years later when I became an interior designer. Something we never were able to discuss together – but that had its birth with her.

I think of the trips we went on that in retrospect she really didn’t have to include us in...St John’s, Nantucket, San Francisco, Hungary. Those were happy times and years for her and George that she welcomed us into.

The memories and list of lessons come back to me and I’m sure will continue to. But it was Mary’s zest for life that was the basis of it all I think. To experience the joys of life while weathering the sorrows. This was something I always admired and will remember always. Mary, I don’t know if I ever told you this and hope you know it...I love you.
