“ I hope you had the best of birthdays mommom, your now 82. Who would've known that last year was going to be our last everything? Last Christmas, last thanksgiving and so on. I miss you more than anything and I really wanted you to be around for when I got older. I promised you all along that I would take good care of poppop but the only helping him would be if he got to hug you or kiss you one more time. You're my inspiration and I hope that I can die being in a happy marriage. Always and forever mommom. Love you!!

“ I used to love when she would invite everyone over on thanksgiving and we would have so much food that I felt like I did not want to eat anymore. When she would paint the wall in the living room to make it look like bricks and add turquoise because that was her favorite color.
